How to post about a data center on social media.

Residents forward these posts into neighborhood groups. Three local governments showing how to be the calm, factual source.

EXPLAIN WHERE THINGS STAND

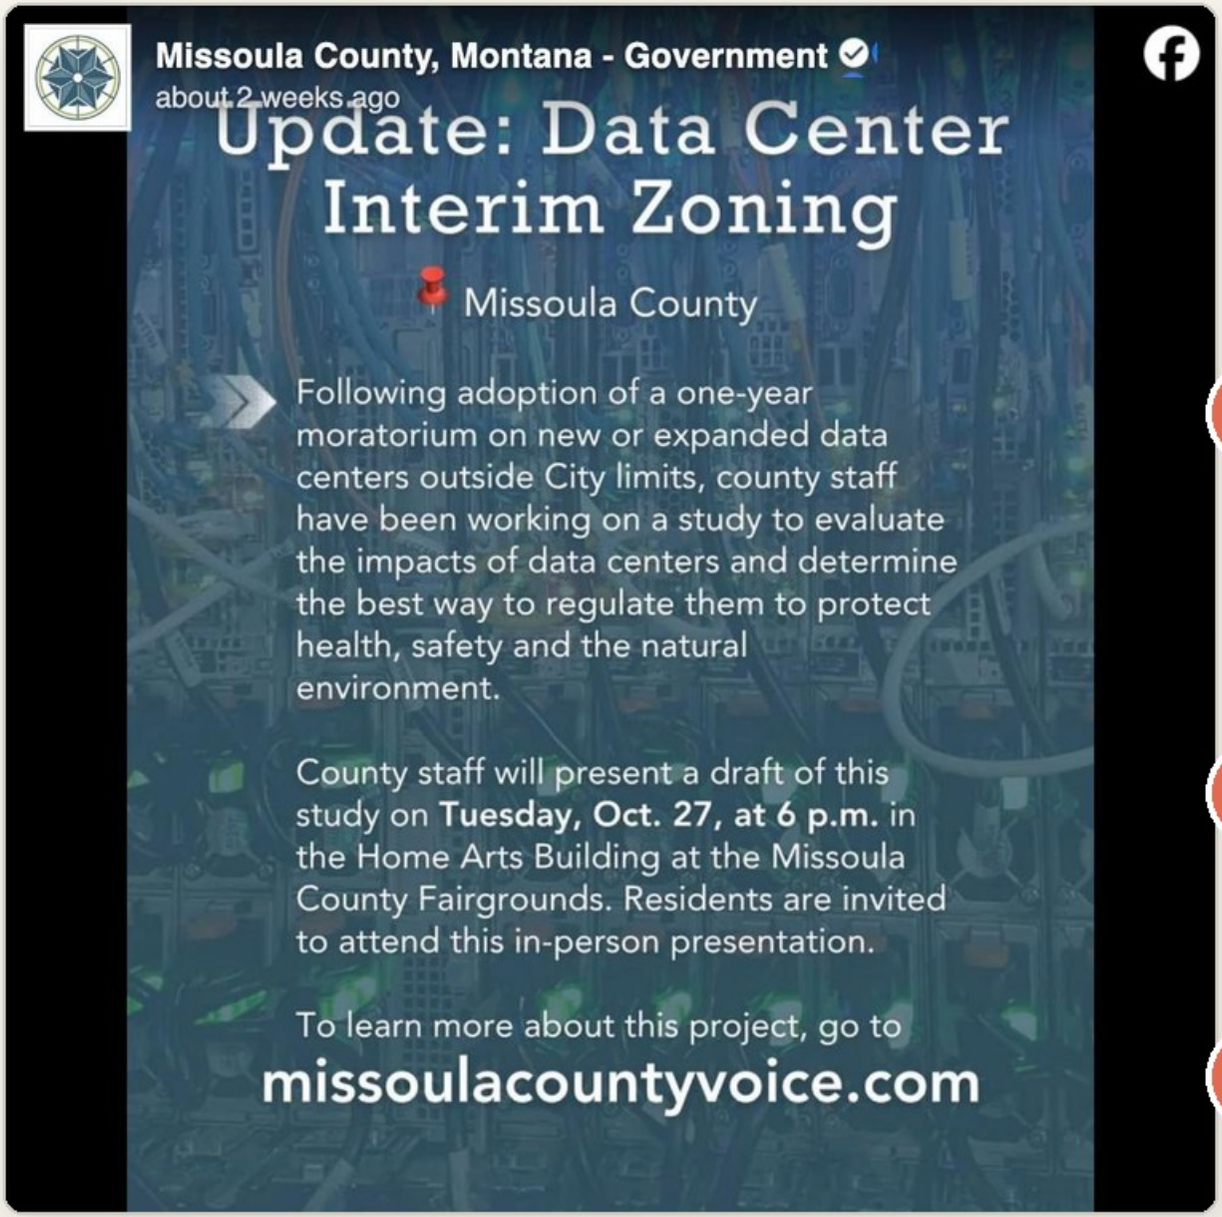

Bullhead City, Arizona

1. Says who is speaking: a message from the city manager.
2. Names the neighborhood and the concerns residents raised at council.
3. Promises a clear update on where things stand, then gives it.

STATE THE STAGE

Missoula County, Montana

1. The stage, plainly: a one-year moratorium while staff study the impacts.
2. What happens next: the draft study, with a day, a time, and a room.
3. One place to read more, repeated in the graphic and the text.

HOST THE CONVERSATION

Rapid City, South Dakota

CITY OF RAPID CITY TO HOST OPEN HOUSE ON PROPOSED DATA CENTERS ORDINANCE

RAPID CITY, SD—Rapid City's Community Development Department will host an open house next week on a proposed ordinance regarding data centers in the community.

The open house is scheduled for Wednesday, October 14 from 5-7:30 p.m. in Council Chambers and the Circle of Friends Community Room of City Hall. Community Development staff will be available to share details of the proposed ordinance... See more

75 118 291

1. The headline names the proposal: an ordinance on data centers.
2. An open house, not a hearing, with the date, hours, and rooms.
3. Staff in the room to walk residents through the details.

FROM THE GUIDE

Five moves that keep your page the trusted source

1. Name the site.
   An address or intersection tells residents whether it is their backyard.

2. State the stage.
   Proposed, under review, approved, denied, or paused. Say which.

3. Answer water and power up front.
   Even to say what you know and what you don't yet.

4. Link to the record.
   The agenda item, staff report, or recording.

5. Say what's next, and when.
   The next hearing date and how to weigh in.
