

FROM THIS WEEK'S FEEDS

Three posts. Zero press- release voice.

A kid's new bike, a rib joint's grand opening, and a flooded road. Written like a person — and the numbers followed.

NEENAH · WISCONSIN

They told a kid's story.

WHY IT WORKS

An 8th-grade football player was hauling his gear on a busted bike — so a police lieutenant used a gift card to get him a new one. 2,100 reactions.

WESTWEGO · LOUISIANA

They got genuinely excited.

WHY IT WORKS

A ribbon-cutting for RibMaster's new spot — “best ribs around!!” No corporate hedging, just a city glad a business opened. 760 reactions.

GALLIA COUNTY · OHIO

They warned with personality.

WHY IT WORKS

“We don't issue warnings about high water simply to inconvenience you.” A safety notice with a point of view — and 1,400 shares.

THE THROUGH-LINE

Write it like you'd say it out loud.

Heartfelt, excited, or firm — residents respond to a human voice, even on a flood warning. The press-release tone is the one thing guaranteed to get scrolled past.
