THIS WEEK ON LOCAL-GOVERNMENT FEEDS

Public art on social media.

Three posts from the past two weeks that got residents out to see it, and talking about it.

THIS WEEKEND ONLY! Art is taking a different perspective at Generations Park! 🎨🦆

Fort Worth artist Jan Riggins, known for her incredible anamorphic artwork, has created a one-of-a-kind installation celebrating the ducks of our park lake. This piece was originally planned for Art at the Park on October 3, but after the event was canceled due to weather, we're bringing it to you another way!

GIVE PEOPLE A REASON TO GO NOW

City of Bedford, Texas

1. "This weekend only": a reason to go now.
2. Names the artist and what makes the piece unusual.
3. Says exactly where to find it in the park.

BUILD ANTICIPATION

City of Huntington, West Virginia

1. A teaser hook: something big is coming.
2. Names the artist and the host, the Huntington Museum of Art.
3. Photos from the announcement, renderings on easels.

TIE IT TO WHO YOU ARE

City of El Mirage, Arizona

1. Ties the mural to a milestone: the City's 75th anniversary.
2. Brings people together: residents, partners, artists, local leaders.
3. The mural itself, large enough to read.

BORROW THESE

Five habits of public art posts that work

1. Name the artist.
   People share work when they know who made it.

2. Say where and when.
   An address, a spot in the park, the last day to see it.

3. Give a reason to go now.
   This weekend only, an unveiling, a photo spot.

4. Tie it to the community.
   An anniversary, a local landmark, the people in the mural.

5. Show the work big.
   One clear photo beats a grid of small ones.
